About This Planner

Scattered books), we have learned that school success has less to do with how "smart" kids are than with how smart they work. Being able to manage time, plan, organize, and stay on track toward a goal (commonly called executive skills) has way more to do with school success than points on an IQ test.

This planner serves several purposes. It allows you to learn more about yourself as a learner by giving you the tools to assess your executive skills strengths and weaknesses. It also gives you space to set goals for the year, and it provides templates to help you carry out common academic tasks such as writing papers or studying for tests. It also functions as a daily, weekly, and monthly planner.

We see this as both a workbook and a planner. For some users, the workbook section will be the most useful and can be used independently of the planner section. For others, the planner section can be used as a to-do list to accompany other methods of tracking assignments, such as online school web portals or course syllabi provided by teachers. It's an all-in-one resource, conveniently three-hole punched to fit in your binder, that enables you to stay on top of your work, plan your school life, and learn to work smarter rather than harder.

Since we are always looking for ways to improve what we do, we would appreciate hearing any comments or suggestions you have.

Using the Planner with a Coach

efore publishing this planner, we tried it out with kids to get their feedback. Here's what we learned: The teens who tried it out thought it was a great idea, but they had trouble using the planner consistently. Learning new skills and habits is not easy.

As you know, serious athletes work with a coach to develop their athletic skills. Even highly paid pros (such as tennis players and golfers) continue to work with coaches long after they've started earning thousands of dollars playing their sport. Coaching can help build executive skills, too.

You can use this planner by yourself, but we designed the planner to be used with an executive skills coach, who can help you get the most out of this tool.

Who can be your coach? Your school may be able to provide you with a coach. We have written a book for school professionals on coaching students around executive skills. If your school is unable to provide you with a coach, there are professional coaching resources out there, and you should discuss this with your parents. Some helpful websites are www.chadd.org, and www.chadd.org, and <a href="https://www.adhdcoaches.org, <a href="https://www.chadd.org, and <a href="https://www.adhdcoaches.org, <a href="https://www.chadd.org, and <a href="https://www.chadd.org, occupational therapy, and the fields of special education or learning disabilities. Otherwise, a tutor, a guidance counselor, or a favorite teacher could help you learn to use this planner. You might even work with another student with strong executive skills who's being mentored by an adult.

The important thing is that you have nearly daily contact, at least at the beginning, with your coach so he or she can help you stay on track in using the planner and in following the steps outlined in the various sections.

Why bother? A lot of the things you learn in school don't stick. Let's face it, plenty of dates, names, places, and facts are forgotten as soon as the test is over. (We once saw a billboard in front of a roadside motel that said, "Another day has passed that I didn't use algebra even once.") But executive skills are actually pretty important. They're skills you need not only to be a successful student but also to be successful for the rest of your life. If you can develop these habits of mind while you're still in school, we promise that you will never regret a minute you spent nailing them down.

Yes, it's hard work at the start, but there is a huge payoff at the end. In the next section, we talk a little about executive skills and brain development, but here's an important fact about the brain: When you're learning new skills, it takes effort at first, and the brain uses up a lot of energy in the form of glucose—the fuel that powers the brain—when you practice. But the more you practice, not only do you get better at the skill, but it actually takes less effort. We know this because scientists can see that the brain uses less glucose to feed the practice. Eventually, the skills that seemed to take so much work when you started out will actually become automatic. Our hope is that by using this planner, you can make important executive skills an easy new habit.

Let's get started.

Planner Overview

his is a planner for students in grades 6–12. It is designed to help you set learning goals that work for you and to track your progress toward meeting those goals. It will also help you keep track of what you have to do and manage your time on a daily basis throughout the school year.

The planner is divided into four parts. Each part can be used independently according to the needs of the individual student. A brief overview of each section follows, with more detailed instructions included at the beginning of each section.

Part I: Understanding Your Executive Skills Profile

Executive skills are brain-based skills that develop between birth and age 25 and improve with practice. They are critical to school success. They can be divided up and defined in various ways, and there are many different skills. The ones we've included in this planner are the ones that seem to matter most to success, both in school and beyond.

In this section, you will fill out a questionnaire that will help you find your strongest and weakest skills. You can then identify specific study problems associated with your weakest skills. We then offer a variety of strategies you might choose from to address your weaknesses or problem situations.

Part II: Goal Setting

Research shows that people who set goals achieve higher levels of performance than those who don't. In this section, you will have the opportunity to think about long-term goals (what you hope to do after high school), as well as shorter-term goals such as what you hope to accomplish in a single marking period. You will also be able to look back at your accomplishments at the end of the marking period and at the end of the year to assess what went well and what you might do differently the next time.

Part III: Strategies for Success

This section includes templates, planning forms, and brief descriptions of a variety of strategies to help with things such as writing papers, planning long-term projects, studying for tests, reading for comprehension, note taking, proofreading, and staying organized.

Part IV: Daily/Weekly/Monthly Planners

This is where you keep track of the work you have to do. It includes space for daily and weekly tasks, as well as monthly planners so you don't lose sight of long-term assignments. You'll find daily/weekly planner pages for 48 weeks (the full academic year plus a few weeks in the summer) and 12 monthly planners. Use pencil to fill in the planners so that you can correct any mistakes. There are specific instructions for how to make best use of this section.

PART I

Understanding Your Executive Skills Profile

veryone has strengths and weaknesses in different executive skills, in the same way that everyone finds performing some kinds of tasks or learning some kinds of subject matter easier than others. Executive skills don't mature fully until at least your mid-20s, but well before that age you may recognize that you're naturally good at some things (maybe planning) but struggle with others (maybe flexibility). The more you know about your own executive skills profile, the more you can take advantage of your natural strengths while developing a game plan for improving your weaker skills.

There are three steps to understanding your own individual executive skills profile and planning how to build your executive skills based on this knowledge:

- Step 1. Take the Executive Skills Questionnaire (pages 4–7). This will enable you to identify your top two or three skills and your weakest two or three skills. You'll have a chance to refine your understanding of your executive skills weaknesses later, but take special note of your strengths, because you may be able to use them to deal with your weaknesses.
- Step 2. Fill out the Executive Skills Problem Checklist (pages 8–11).
 First check off every problem you think gets in the way of doing your best in school. Then go back and look at all the items you checked off and CHOOSE THREE that you think are the biggest obstacles. Review your executive skills strengths (from the Executive Skills Questionnaire) and think about how you might be able to use those strengths to help you academically. (For example, if you have strong goal-directed persistence, you may be able to use that to override your weakness in task initiation by telling yourself "I know what I'm working toward—getting started quickly will get me there sooner.")

• Step 3. When you've selected the three problems you think get in the way the most, begin thinking about how to tackle them, using the Executive Skills Tip Sheet. We've included definitions of each executive skill, as well as some tips for working on your weaknesses in individual tip sheets. We've included suggestions for "self-talk" because we know that what people say to themselves about a problem can have a powerful impact on how they handle that problem. It's best if you come up with your own ideas about what to tell yourself, but we've given you some suggestions.

Executive Skills Tip Sheets

This sheet gives definitions of each executive skill included in the Executive Skills Problem Checklist, along with tips and things you can say to yourself to get better at that skill. As you read through the suggestions, circle or highlight those ideas that you think might work for you.

Response Inhibition—being able to control your impulses so that you can think before you act, resist peer pressure, and make good choices (for example, choosing to study rather than do more appealing activities).

Tips

- Be aware of your unique temptations and make a plan to avoid them.
- Ask yourself, "Good choice or bad choice?"
- Practice waiting (for example, add a little more time or work before giving yourself the reward).
- · Other strategies:

Self-Talk*

- First work, then play.
- Learn from your mistakes.
- Stop and think.
- Your own idea:

Working Memory—being able to keep in mind everything you have to remember—and remembering what worked the last time.

Tips

- Get teachers' permission to e-mail assignments.
- Do all work on iPad or tablet so it's always with you.
- Use colored markers to highlight instructions (use different colors to signal different things, such as green for the most important, red for things you might be likely to forget).
- Set reminders with time and sound cue on your smartphone.
- Make checklists.
- Other strategies:

- Am I forgetting anything?
- Check your list.
- Check your agenda.
- Your own idea:

^{*}Self-talk means giving yourself instructions, words of encouragement, or prompts to remind you what you're working on and what your goal is.

Emotional Control—being able to manage your feelings so they don't get in the way of getting work done or meeting goals.

Tips

- Label the feeling and let it go.
- When you can, walk away from the upsetting situation, get ahold of yourself, and come back.
- Look into learning meditation techniques.
- Pat yourself on the back when you stay cool.
- Other strategies:

Self-Talk

- Take 10.
- Take deep breaths.
- This, too, shall pass.
- Big deal or little deal?
- Your own idea:

Sustained Attention—staying on task, getting things done in the time you've given yourself to do them, even if you're tired, bored, or have more appealing distractions.

Tips

- Set realistic work goals and stick to them.
- Take planned breaks and get back to work on schedule.
- Gather all necessary materials before beginning a task.
- Build in rewards for completing tasks.
- Other strategies:

Self-Talk

- You can't walk away from this.
- Don't quit now.
- Back to work.
- First work, then play.
- Your own idea:

Task Initiation—being able to make yourself start a task. If you've seen yourself getting closer to your goal, this is the first step on that path. If you don't take this step, you can't get closer.

Tips

- Pick the task (make it small).
- Pick the start time.
- Pick the minimum work time.
- Pick the cue to start.
- Other strategies:

- Just do it.
- Take baby steps.
- Start small.
- Your own idea:

Flexibility—the ability to adapt to unexpected events and to come up with multiple solutions to problems.

Tips

- Notice the physical warning signs of inflexibility (muscle tightness, breathing changes) and ask yourself if you can find a way to be flexible.
- Whenever you have to make a decision about something, ask yourself, "What could go wrong and what's Plan B if this doesn't work?"
- Other strategies:

Self-Talk

- Big deal or little deal?
- What are your options?
- What's Plan B?
- Is there another way to think about this?
- Your own idea:

Planning/Prioritization—planning is your road map, your GPS. When you have a good plan, you know all the turns you have to make and how to get past the roadblocks along the way. You also know how to focus on what's most important and let the little things go.

Tips

- Use the planning forms in this agenda (long-term projects; test study plan).
- Ask teachers for a preview of a lecture or to tell you what are the most important concepts to focus on when studying for tests. (Teachers who provide study guides for tests make this easy!)
- When you have written instructions for homework assignments, underline and number each instruction that's an action.
- · Other strategies:

Self-Talk

- What's your destination?
- Your plan will be a built-in GPS to get there.
- Map the route.
- What comes first, next, and next, and what do you need to give up to get there?
- · First things first.
- Your own idea:

Organization—having a system for keeping track of information and materials, especially the things you need every day (homework, notebooks, keys, phone, sports equipment, etc.)—putting everything in its place, so when you look for it, it's there.

Tips

- Use laptop or iPad for managing information/ assignments/class notes.
- Use a note organizer app such as OneNote or Evernote.
- Spend five minutes every day staying organized.
- Other strategies:

- A place for everything and everything in its place.
- Do you have it together?
- Your own idea:

Time management—Each day is a 24-hour shot clock. Time management allows you to manage the tug of war between what you want to do, what you need to do, and what others ask you to do.

Tips

- Use this planner to make daily plans.
- Estimate how long a task will take—and check to see if you were right.
- Break homework down into short time segments. (Pomodoro is a smartphone app that helps you do that.)
- Other strategies:

Self-Talk

- How much time do you have?
- Are you on track?
- What you need to do comes before what you want to do.
- Honestly, how long will it really take?
- Each day is like a shot clock in a game.
- Your own idea:

Goal-Directed Persistence—This is a giant version of sustained attention: You have a goal, and you're determined to get there. What you do on a day-to-day basis gets you to that goal, and keeping this in mind helps you connect immediate actions and consequences with other ones down the road.

Tips

- Make daily study plans to build a sense of accomplishment.
- Set any goal related to schoolwork, and if the goal isn't met, make it smaller, more attainable.
- Place a picture of your goal in a prominent place to remind you what you're working on.
- · Other strategies:

Self-Talk

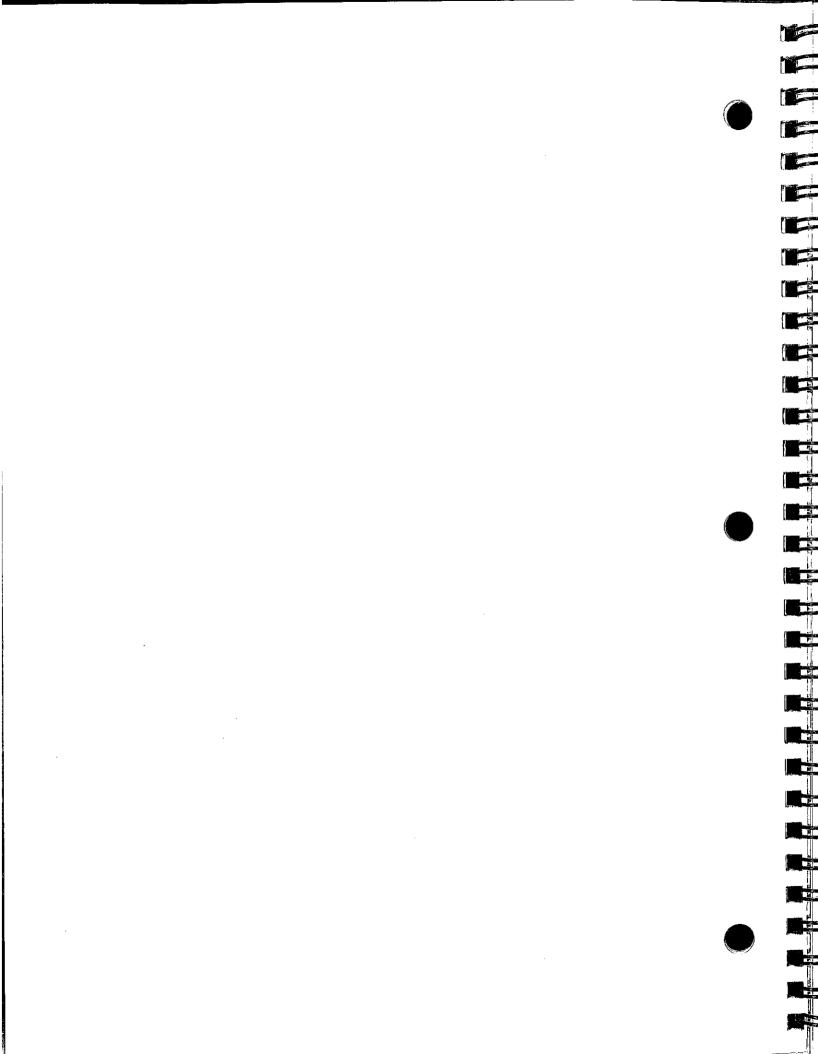

- What are you working on?
- Are you on track?
- Don't give up now.
- Keep your eye on the prize.
- Will this help you get to your goal?
- Your own idea:

Metacognition—What did I do + why did I do it = what will I do the next time? Metacognition is your brain's life lesson machine. It allows you to look at your past actions and behaviors, analyze them, and use that information to make more informed decisions about how to act in the future.

Tips

- Ask teachers for a test study guide.
- Create error-monitoring checklists (for example, a proofreading checklist).
- Create your own study packets for tests by pulling together all important material and stapling it together with a cover.
- Ask four self-monitoring questions: "What is my problem?"
 "What is my plan?" "Am I following my plan?" "How did I do?"
- Other strategies:

- What's the big picture?
- How are you doing?
- What worked for you before?
- What didn't?
- What do you need or want for a grade?
- Have you studied enough to get it?
- Your own idea:

PART II

Goal Setting

e know that people who get what they want from life do so in part because they set goals. Goals help us because:

- They direct behavior (they aim us at doing what will get us where we want to go and away from distractions).
- They energize us.
- They encourage persistence.
- They motivate us to discover and use new knowledge and skills that get us to our goals.

Goal setting has the following steps (all found on the Goal-Setting Worksheet):

- Identify your long-term goal. What do you want to do after high school?
 Are you shooting for college or for a job? The Goal-Setting Worksheet gives you space to check off your choice and also to write down the col lege you hope to attend or the kind of job you hope to get if you know that, too.
- Next, think about what you hope to accomplish this year. You may want to list academic goals (for example, get grades of C+ or better in all my subjects, turn in 80% of my homework on time) or executive skills goals (for example, improve my time management skills, decrease procrastination). If you can do it, choose two academic and two executive skills goals to focus on.
- Now think about marking period goals. You're going to fill out this part of the worksheet at the beginning of each marking period (don't do it all at once, because the goals may change as the year goes along). First, decide on some goals tied directly to getting good grades, choosing only the one(s) you think are most important and that you're most likely to be successful at.

- Also for each marking period, think about what grades you want to earn in each subject area. Ideally, you should think about each major subject, but if that's more than you can manage, decide which classes you really want to focus on.
- At the end of the marking period, reflect on how well you did. Note what grades you were hoping to earn and what grades you actually earned. In the worksheet, jot down some ideas for what you might do differently the next marking period. You may decide you should just keep doing what you were doing.
- At the end of the year, take a few minutes to reflect on how the year went.
 List some things that went well and some things you want to work on next year. Keep these in mind when the next school year begins.

PART III

Strategies for Success

his part includes templates and brief descriptions of a variety of strategies to help with things such as writing papers, planning long-term projects, studying for tests, reading for comprehension, note taking, proofreading, and staying organized.

The first three forms (Studying for Tests, Five-Paragraph Essay Template, and Long-Term-Planning Form) give you several copies of templates you can use. Having them in the planner gives you a permanent record and makes them harder to lose (unless you lose the planner). As the year goes along, you may run out of these, so feel free to photocopy them and keep copies in your binder. Or you can download copies at www.guilford.com/dawson6-forms.

The section on Other Strategies includes brief descriptions of strategies you might use for other kinds of assignments. You may realize that you don't know how to do things that teachers expect you to do (such as read for comprehension, take notes, write a summary). This section gives you some ideas for how to do these things. If you're not happy with any of the suggestions, you may want to do an Internet search of the topic to find other study strategies that would work better for you.

We thank Elisabeth Pasquini, of the Taipei American School in Taiwan, for her improvements to the Studying for Tests form.

Other Strategies

Reading Comprehension Strategies

SMART (Self-Monitoring Approach to Reading and Thinking)

- While you're reading, place a check mark in the margin next to things you understand.
- Place a question mark in the margin next to anything you don't understand.
- When you've finished a section, summarize in your own words what you understand.
- Take another look at what you didn't understand—reread those parts and try to figure out why you don't understand it. See if you can make an association to material or concepts you do understand.

SQ3R (Survey, Question, Read, Recite, Review)

- Survey: Look through the entire chapter to get an overall sense of what the material is about. Look at headings, graphs, charts, and pictures for clues.
- Question: Turn each heading into a question that you will then read to answer.
- Read: Read the material to find the answers to the questions you've generated.
- Recite: At the end of each section, see if you can answer the questions in that section without looking back. Look back for the answers to any questions you were unable to answer.
- Review: When you're done, go back over the questions and try to answer them one more time.

K-W-L

This approach begins with activating any background knowledge (K) you may have related to the topic you are reading about. Jot down notes that highlight what you know (e.g., key words, shorthand references). Then generate a list of what you would like to know about the topic (W). This might be a series of questions or topic areas. Then read the material, and finally summarize what you have learned (L). Again, these could be key words or shorthand references. Write a summary of (or summarize aloud) the material you have read.

Know	Want to learn	Learned

Three-Color Highlighting

As you read, use a different color highlighter for these three categories of information:

- Main points (often the first or last paragraph in a section or the first sentence in a paragraph)
- Supporting details (elaborates on the main points, provides evidence or proof to support assertions or opinions)

• Terms (key vocabulary or concepts)

How to Write a Summary

- 1. Identify the topic being summarized.
- 2. Write the main idea of the passage.
- 3. Include important details that support the main idea.
- 4. Arrange them in a logical order.
- 5. Reread to make sure it makes sense and covers the most important information.

How to Take Good Notes (the Cornell Method)

- 1. Divide lined paper into three columns.
- 2. In the center column, write down what the teacher is saying in the sequence given.

- 3. In the left-hand column, write key concepts and "big ideas."
- 4. In the right-hand column, jot down a word or two that captures a personal experience related to the topic.
- 5. The center column is completed during class.

6. The side columns can be completed in class, as well as when you review your notes after class or when studying for a test.

	How to Stay Organized and Keen Track of Materials

What works for another student may not work for you, but here's an approach to try:

- 1. Use one large binder for all subjects, using a tab divider for each subject. The binder should come with pockets in the front and back.
- 2. Write INCOMPLETE HOMEWORK on the front pocket and put any homework

- assignments you get there as soon as the teacher hands them out. Write COMPLETED HOMEWORK on the back pocket.
- 3. Write the DUE DATE for homework assignments on the top of the sheet as soon as you get it.
- 4. Organize homework in the INCOMPLETE HOMEWORK pocket by due date, with the one due first on top. As soon as you open your binder for whatever reason, you'll see the assignment and the due date to help you remember to do it.
- 5. As soon as you finish a homework assignment, put it in the COMPLETED HOMEWORK pocket.
- 6. Keep all papers your teacher wants you to keep in the section for that class. Throw out papers you don't have to keep. You may want to check with the teacher if you're not sure whether you should save something.
- 7. You may also want to include in the binder a zippered pouch with materials such as pens, pencils, erasers, and calculators.

How to Manage Distractions

Contrary to popular belief, the brain actually CAN'T multitask. What you're really doing when you think you're multitasking is jumping back and forth very quickly between the tasks you're working on. It turns out this is a very inefficient way for the brain to process information or manage output. For teenagers, the most common distraction while studying is technology (surfing the 'Net; texting; managing social media such as Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, and so forth). Playing video games and watching TV are also common distractions. Here are some ways you might want to consider to manage these distractions:

- 1. Rather than jumping back and forth between homework and technology, take technology breaks. Decide how long you think you can focus before you need a break and set the timer on your smartphone. Work until the timer goes off, then set the timer to limit your technology break.
- 2. Rather than working for a set amount of time, set a work goal that you plan to accomplish before taking a break. For example, you may decide to finish half of your math assignment before breaking.
- 3. Do homework with a friend, with both of you agreeing to work for a set amount of time or to complete specific work goals before breaking. Also agree on how long the breaks will last.
- 4. Use technology to screen out distractions rather than create them. Some students, for instance, find they can listen to instrumental music on their iPods but can't listen to music with lyrics because they start thinking about the words when the music includes lyrics.
- 5. If you get bored working on one task for a long time, think about switching off between different homework assignments to break up the tedium. If you have a lot of homework and not a lot of time, this may work better than taking a complete break from studying.

6. As an alternative to technology breaks, take an exercise break. Research shows that physical exercise can improve attention, so you may want to try taking 10-minute breaks to shoot baskets, play foosball, lift weights, go on the treadmill, or play a Wii game that involves exercise.

How to Manage Your Time

Time management is actually composed of other executive skills—task initiation, sustained attention, and planning—as well as a unique element called time estimation. Many students have trouble with time management because they're not good at estimating how long something will take. Most frequently, they underestimate how long a difficult task will take and so don't build in enough time to get it done. Occasionally, students overestimate how long the task will take, which leads them to delay starting because they feel overwhelmed by it. Time estimation can be improved through practice, which is why the daily/weekly planner includes a space for you to estimate how long you think any given homework assignment will take. If you track your estimate to see whether it was correct or not, you can improve your time estimation skills.

Other strategies for improving time management skills are:

- 1. Try to stick to a predictable schedule, particularly for studying, but also for sleep and other daily routines. Build reasonable "down time" into your daily routines.
- Make a public commitment to follow your schedule—for instance, you might tell your mom on Saturday the time you plan to study for a test or begin writing a paper during the weekend. You may even ask her to remind you when the time comes.
- 3. Set alarms or use a reminder program on your smartphone to get you started on time.
- 4. Create checklists or to-do lists that include start times and an estimate of how long the task will take. Add up the amount of time needed to get through the list and delete things if the list is not realistic.

PART IV

Daily/Weekly/Monthly Planners

his section contains two kinds of calendars:

- A daily/weekly planner where you can keep track of the things you need to do during the week and on specific days.
- A monthly planner in which you can keep track of long-term assignments and tests and quizzes.

Daily/Weekly Planner

This section is mainly for writing down homework assignments and due dates.

- To begin with, fill in the dates for each week at least a month in advance or even for the full school year (to get that task out of the way quickly). Use the reference calendar at the back of this planner or a current calendar as a guide and check your work as you go along. If you need to replace a daily/weekly planner page, you can photocopy a blank page and staple it on top.
- Marking Period Goal(s): At the beginning of the week, write down the marking period goal(s) you've decided to work on (e.g., "Hand in all my math homework on time"; "Make the honor roll"). The goal(s) may not change from week to week, but it's helpful to write them down every week just to remind yourself that that's what you're working on.
- Tasks to Be Accomplished This Week: This section of the planner can be used to jot down anything that needs to get done that week (no firm deadlines)—it's basically a to-do list to keep track of things you might otherwise forget if you were only listing tasks on a daily basis. Examples: "Study for math test!"; "Talk to guidance counselor"; "Arrange to retake history exam"; "Finish college essay"; etc. As you do each one, cross it off. If the end of the week comes, and you didn't get to it, put it on next week's list.

- Daily Tasks: Most students access specific instructions for homework assignments either online or through course syllabi provided by the instructor. If the assignment instructions are written on the board, many students take a picture of them with their smartphones. In this space you should simply list the subjects for which you have homework that night. This includes only tasks that are due tomorrow, including tasks for longer-term assignments for which the deadline is tomorrow (e.g., "Choose topic (English)"; "Study for math finals").
  - Place a check mark next to the assignment as soon as you have completed it.
  - Draw a line through each assignment after you have turned it in.
- Daily Reminders: This is the spot to write down anything you have to do that day that stands out. This could be anything you have to remember to do before the day is over—items from the Weekly Tasks you've already created or anything else that may pop up that you're afraid you'll forget to do.
- Check the monthly planner EVERY DAY to make sure you haven't forgotten anything due the next day.

Monthly Planner

You can preview the upcoming month to help you anticipate major assignments and activities that you will need to plan for.

You'll also need to fill in the dates on the monthly planner, using the reference calendars at the top of the page or the back of this planner. Any assignment that's not due the next day should be written on the monthly planner on the date it's due. The monthly planner comes just before the daily/weekly planner each month. No need for long explanations, just a notation so you don't forget, and perhaps include the date when it was assigned so you can go back to the spot in the daily/weekly planner for more detailed instructions. When you're making daily homework plans, be sure to check the monthly planner to make sure you haven't forgotten anything.

As with your daily/weekly planner, place a check mark next to each assignment written in your monthly planner as soon as you complete it and draw a line through it when you've handed it in.
